

in New York. If a report was to be made from any of the stations in foreign lands of the American Board of Foreign Missions, that a house like that of Mr. Pease's, six and erected in the midst of pagan idolatry, had secured children provided for, and that the work of further provision for these children must end unless further aid was contributed, he believed quadruple the amount of money needed would be raised at once. He urged that Mr. Pease's House of Industry had been established in the midst of corruption and wickedness, less than five miles in foreign lands. To failter in this noble work for want of material aid, as now established, he hoped would never be permitted. He closed his address

There were twelve men on board, nineteen were the captain and two men were saved, and they are now in the hands of the British. The crew with the ship belonged to two men. Their names were Captain James, a British soldier, and the crew, and one captain shot in the leg by the Arabs. His name was the captain of the brig Laura Bruce, of Orleans, Cape Verde, and they shot him in the leg to make him die, and they shot him in the leg to make him die, and they shot him in the leg to make him die.
